YOU AND THE LAW: As I mentioned 2 months ago Arch Oboler has filed suit in New York to halt commercial sale and rebroadcast of radio shows he wrote. He calls it piracy and says the artists should be paid. He is taking action against stores selling his shows and publications advertising the stores. SPERDVAC, of which Arch Oboler is an honorary member, is supporting and helping Mr. Oboler's effort as mentioned in their March newsletter. Unfortunately this problem is a never-ending one. Note the article in April HA about copyrights. We have many categories of OTR people...1. The listener who buys or borrows shows. 2. The trader who listens. 3. The person who sells to private parties. 4. The person who sells to radio stations. 5. The station and person who broadcast OTR shows without permission. 6. The syndicators who do get permission. 7. The performers, writers, directors, etc. of these shows...Who is guilty of piracy? The trader; The seller to private parties; the seller to radio stations; the broadcaster;...Everyone has their own ideas. There should be some way for radio personalities to receive some remuneration for their past efforts. How and to what extent under existing copyright laws is unclear. Our OTR HOBBY should not suffer, however...The seller or broadcaster could agree to pay a portion of his sales; but to whom: performers, writers, directors, etc. and to what extent and in what proportion. I would welcome constructive comments from those actively involved in the COPYRIGHT problem.
